

Texas unveils new site to help college students intern

<http://www.bizjournals.com/sanantonio/news/2012/03/19/texas-unveils-new-site-to-help-college.html>

March 19, 2012

San Antonio Business Journal by James Aldridge, Web Editor

Date: Monday, March 19, 2012, 4:38pm CDT

Texas Workforce Commission and DirectEmployers Association officials have launched a new Web site that San Antonio businesses can use to advertise available internship positions.

The site is TexasInternship.jobs and it will be open to employers throughout Texas at no cost.

“Texas offers great economic opportunities to young adults just starting out in their careers,” Gov. Rick Perry says. “This new resource is the latest of our many efforts to prepare our future workforce for competition in the global marketplace.”

TexasInternship.jobs allows students to search for positions by job title, location or employer. Currently, the site has 879 internship listings, but that number is steadily growing.

“This tool will provide students with access to available internship opportunities, which will ultimately lead them to the skills and knowledge required by today’s employers,” says Dr. MacGregor Stephenson, assistant commissioner of workforce, academic affairs and research for the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board. “I would encourage Texas employers to use this free site to identify students who are interested in a career in their industry and who can also become valuable additions to their workforce.”

Employers can post internship opportunities by registering at WorkInTexas.com.